The Refugee Crisis, the Eurozone Crisis, and the New Logic of European Integration

We compare differences and similarities in the management of the Eurozone crisis and the recent refugee crisis. While the Eurozone crisis is well-researched, the still unfolding refugee crisis is not. The comparison highlights not only the specific features of this crisis but also elucidates general problems of risk sharing and distributive conflict associated with the European integration of core state powers. The findings present anomalies for both neofunctionalist and intergovernmentalist readings of European integration.
